

The Problem: Regulatory Compliance

If you've been in the medical and pharmaceutical industry for any time at all, you've heard the word compliance. In fact, you or your staff may have lost quite a few hours rushing around, snagging signatures, and sorting through files searching for the right form when there were fifteen other meaningful tasks on your to-do list that day.

Why compliance and compliance teams? In order to meet the mandatory regulations set by 21 CFR Part 11, companies must maintain precise controls like:

- audits
- audit trails
- disclosure requirements
- documentation for software and systems involved in processing electronic data
- internal reviews
- system trails

In short, the process of documentation has become an entire career of its own that nobody is getting paid any extra for: Initiating, following, and maintaining compliance comes with high costs, project management details, and the tedious task of keeping up with signature after signature. Keeping a literal paper trail of the process is taxing, pricey, precarious—and time-consuming.

While the regulations and mandates of compliance aren't going away any time soon, the issues that you and your staff face can.
